This is a serious compilation and collection of factual studies, observations, recollections, and hopes and dreams of humans who believe that whales are so much more special than most of us realize. It was written by many authors with the intent of raising the collective consciousness of humanity and to stop the killing of these magnificent animals. Interesting and provocative. As a scuba diver who personally witnessed an act of kindness by a Grey Whale in La Jolla Bay, I am just another human being who has read and learned enough to believe, that these animals have lived for thousands of years in the oceans of our world with few natural enemies (before mankind), may have more to teach us than we can yet imagine. "Within the headcase of the Sperm Whale lies the largest brain the world has ever known". From, Sounding, a wonderful novel about the Sperm Whale by Hank Searles

This book is filled with information on whales and neat paintings and pictures. It has bunches of little life stories that make feel awe, admiration, and a sense of coming together with people all over the world who love and respect the whales. Reading this book helped me to understand that whales are not worlds apart from me, all I have to do is look in the right place. It's a shame this book went out of print because the information in this book can not become out dated. I liked this book so much that after i borrowed from the library, and read it I decided I had to buy it and read it over and over!

I wrote this in the early 70's and it became an important part of the world-wide movement to stop the commercial killing of whales and dolphins. The book influenced a lot of people and caused them to think differently about saving species. There is a richness and wonder in the stories in the book which has drained out of the dialogue about "saving" nature, a dialogue now human centered and soulless. Read it, there is much to enjoy here.
